Ralph Severini is steadfastly leading Hideout as its new interim mayor, bringing both deep municipal experience and executive business leadership. A resident since 2017, Ralph quickly became involved in the community, first as vice chairman of the Hideout Planning Commission and later as a town councilman for five years. He also founded the town's Economic Development Committee and has contributed municipal expertise from his service in two other towns on the East Coast.

As mayor, Ralph is committed to transparency and ensuring that every resident has a voice. He sponsored Hideout's only referendum, which allowed all residents to vote on the Richardson Flat Annexation. Ralph also holds developers accountable, engaging directly when needed to ensure commitments are met. He supports balanced growth for Hideout, including recreational amenities, light commercial development such as restaurants, integrated trail and transportation systems, and a community gathering area for residents.

A native of New Jersey, Ralph recently retired from Amazon Web Services and has previously served as a vice president for four publicly traded companies. He holds master's degrees in science (MS) and business (MBA), along with an undergraduate degree in mathematics and a minor in engineering.
